Magazine of American History.
The January Magazine of American History is strong and interesting in all its varied features. The frontispiece is a fine portrait of Count De Vergennes, illustrating an exceptionally well-considered paper by Hon. John Jay, on the life and character of the great French statesman; a paper which illuminates with fresh light the chapter of diplomacy preceding the signing of the treaty that invested our republic with boundaries and resources imperial in extent. Through Mr. Jay's skillful treatment of the subject, the reader is made acquainted with the dangers that were discovered and avoided by the American ambassador, and may note the influence of Count De Vergennes on the destinies of America. The "Manor of Gardiner's Island" is an illustrated paper by the editor, sketching not only the romantic career of the founders of the first English settlement in the state, but the growth, development, and general history of the manorial property, and its twelve successive proprietors. "Puritanism in New York," by Rev. Charles A. Briggs, D. D., will attract distinguished attention, as he traces the origin and growth of this religious force until the middle of the XVIIIth century. The "Building of the Monitor," by Rev. Francis B. Wheeler, D. D., of Poughkeepsie, is another paper presenting new facts of special historic value. A notable contribution to the number is the illustrated "Diary of Dr. John Jeffries," the first aeronaut who crossed the English channel in a balloon. He was an American, and the centennial of the event is to be celebrated in Boston on January 7th, 1885. Original documents contain several unpublished letters from prominent men of Revolution. Charles Lydell and Norton furnishes the second chapter of "Political Americana," and "Minor Topics, Notes, Queries, Replies, Societies, and the other departments are even more highly entertaining than usual. Price, $5.00 a year in advance.

PROGRESSIVE MORALITY. By THOMAS POWELL, LL.D., F. S. A., President Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford. Price, post-free, 15 cents. J. Pizzardi, Publisher, 23, Lafayette Place, New York.

The progress of natural science has been not without effect upon the data of the moral and intellectual sciences. The present work, by an author of the highest eminence, is an attempt to show wherein the principles of moral conduct are reinforced or explained by the application to ethics of the methods of research employed in the study of nature. The author aims to present a scientific conception of Morality in a popular form, and with a view to practical application rather than to discuss theoretical difficulties. His views are in full harmony with those which, making exceptions for a few back eddies in the stream of modern thought, are winning their way to general acceptance among the more instructed and reflective men of our day.

THE REAL ROMANCE. A picture from life from 1838 to 1862. Volume II. Around the world in twelve years. By R. A. N. Harvey. Salt Lake: J. C. Graham & Co. Price, 50 cents.

This is an interesting little volume, giving an account of the circumnavigation of the globe, with a description of the manners, customs, habits and everyday life of many peoples. There are pretty descriptions of many beautiful and grand scenes in the old world, Australia, the islands of the Pacific and North America. The reader will be both entertained and instructed.

WATER! WATER!

A Suggestion to the Dry Benchers to Make Cisterns.

As this subject is now, and has been receiving a considerable share of attention, and especially so by those most interested, the sufferers of those very dry localities, I have thought it perhaps might not be unacceptable to those so suffering, to offer a few suggestions of a method to largely supply this imperative want, not only those but in other parts, or even all parts of this city, not for irrigation uses, but one, as equally or perhaps more important, domestic uses, in our houses, for drinking and cooking. I have never seen, to any extent at least, this method of storing water here in use, only in basins or tubs, and these exposed to the atmosphere and other influences of dust and filth as to make the water nearly useless. By the method I now wish to present, water can be saved easily and even indefinitely, cheaply, of the best quality, and in the best condition.

To simply state this means the construction for our dwellings of small or large, as may be desired, on means allowed, of underground cisterns for rain and snow water. To do this is very easy and not very expensive either. This subject is an eminently interesting one, and deserves earnest and intelligent attention, both of corporations and private individual enterprise, not only in cities, but even for country districts, and farms, and this can be done at considerable less cost with more certain and satisfactory results, and far, very far better, purer and consequently healthy water for domestic uses, and even if so desired for live stock, sheep husbandry, etc. We will now glance at a few matters of the cost of digging wells and cisterns.

The roofage of a moderate sized dwelling, if properly provided with what all should have both for comfort and convenience, and also the preservation of the building—good spouting and conductors—these may be made economically of either lumber or tin—this roofage will generally, in houses, receive and run off sufficient water during our wet season for family use.

Substantial cisterns of sufficient capacity to secure this roof water can be constructed at considerable less expense than sunk wells, much less than comparatively shallow ones, and generally in most cases is more accessible. Wells must be sunk at particular places, where there is a prospect of getting water, often most inconvenient, while cisterns may be made wherever taste or convenience dictate. Well-sinking is often a failure, cisterns never, and they need not be so deep as even the shallow wells, and as all, on consideration, know, most of our wells are deep and generally cost much labor and frequently several hundreds of dollars. All that is really necessary for the construction in most cases, being a hole of capacity desired, and some good hydraulic lime, of which one coat of plastering on the ground is sufficient and is in most cases the best and cheapest. If desired of course, the cistern may be brick lined and then plastered, but you must always observe and obtain good, well-burned ones, all others being worse than useless.

In many localities, I know of wells of from 50 to 100 feet deep, costing $300 or $400 and after the great outlay only furnish limited supplies of water, often of poor quality, raised with much labor and trouble on account of the depth while in any locality wished—quite a consideration—good and ample cisterns can be made at a cost of $20 to $50 which will afford a full supply of soft, pure water for all purposes at slight depth and easy draught, and conveniently under cover, in pleasing contrast every way with the tugging draught, and scantiness of deep wells, often weary walks in snow and mud, or a burning sun.

We design to pursue this subject further in its important bearing on the health and general good of all, being assured of its practical uses and necessity to all, and especially, as many city wells are fouling up from various causes, and filling a much felt want in a great number of dry localities.
